

Morgan’s Pentecost Oath

Version: 1.0

I have kept the watch through the night.

I stand at the edge of the day, where darkness loosens its hold and what is sworn may yet be spoken.

*Before the breath that moves unseen, before the fire that gives voice and resolve,
and before the witness who hears and may not speak,
I set my will and swear.*

By the blade I bear, and by the strength that sustains it, I bind myself to the watch laid upon me—whether I sought it or not.

*I will stand for the defenseless:
for women and for children,
for the innocent,
for the forgotten,
and for those whom no one else will guard.*

*I will offer mercy where mercy is asked, and I will stay my hand against the one who yields, even when such mercy is turned against me,
and even when the cost is mine alone.*

I will not abandon my brothers in the watch, nor betray them in word or deed, nor place my own safety above their keeping, so long as I am able to stand beside them.

*I will speak truth as I am able,
bear witness when others turn away, and hold fast when honor brings no reward.*

*I take this oath freely, without promise of victory,
without assurance of justice, and without claim to rest or release.*

*Let this vow bind me while I live.
Let it shape my hand and my will.
Let me be broken by it before I break it, and let the fire that hears these words hold me to them until the watch is ended.*

— sworn at first light